it provides insight into the state of an issue that will need to be addressed as part of a broader health reform discussion.

In fact, it is important to remember that there is still a major gap in our health care system when it comes to attaining universal coverage. Methodology More specifically, the survey consisted of 31 questions that asked the respondent's opinions of health care access, financial burden of paying for care, and their opinions of health insurance. The survey queried the respondent's demographics as well as their ability to pay for care. Some of the questions were specific to sources of health care while others were more general regarding their ability to purchase insurance. Interpretation of Results It was discovered that the main reason that Americans lack a usual source of health care is because of their inability to afford care. Additionally, this is most prevalent in certain populations - that is, those who have lower incomes are less likely to have a usual source. Additionally, individuals with chronic illnesses are less likely to have a usual source of health care. This is surprising because one would think that chronic illness would be a driving force in needing access to regular health care. Finally, the survey showed that nearly one in four uninsured Americans were in the 17-26 age range. It is important to remember that certain policies like the Health Insurance Exchange will greatly impact the health care needs of these individuals.
