The state is also adopting “Truth in Financial Services” reforms that will require transparency in auto insurance, required providers of financing, and other financial services. Background In 2017, the state passed Truth in Finance, Truth in Auto & Trucking

("TIFT") and Truth in Lending laws. These three laws require auto insurance companies to disclose to consumers the premium amount, the cost of repairs, and how these costs can affect a driver's car insurance rate. They also require credit card companies to notify consumers of the interest rate and monthly fee, whether the minimum monthly fee is waived, and other information to support the rates charged. Under the Truth in Auto & Trucking Act, consumer credit card companies that offer a variable rate must post a notice at least 2 weeks prior to the start of the new rate. The law also requires merchants and other financial institutions that offer financing to disclose to consumers a rate cap and reasonable rate adjustments at the time of the loan. Both TIFT and Truth in Finance regulations are expected to go into effect October 1, 2019. In April 2018, former Illinois Governor Bruce Rauner signed the Truth in Lending and Truth in Finance bills into law. Under the Truth in Finance Act, consumer credit card companies that provide variable rate financing must disclose to consumers the rate cap and reasonable rate adjustments for the initial period of the loan. The limit on the interest rate and the monthly fee is to be disclosed to consumers at least two business days prior to the start of a rate change or fee increase. “Variable rate” means a rate which is not otherwise fixed by contract or otherwise is not capable of adjustment in response to changes in an index, benchmark, or market price; or is not capable of adjustment in response to changes in the amount of credit granted on a loan or in response to customer-initiated
